

Hanna Batoréo (Hanna Krystyna Jakubowicz Batoréo) has been an integrated member of CLUNL since 2007 but a member of the CLCM Group since 2015 and its coordinator since December 2017, when the Group was totally reorganized and reoriented scientifically. Her academic interests are in Language studied in a broad sense, in its cognitive, functional, social and cultural dimensions, encompassing verbal and non-verbal registers, and offering new insights not only into linguistic phenomena but also into a wide variety of social, psychological, and cultural ones.

Her research is based on the pragmatic and experiential basis of language-in-use, with the framework of Cognitive Linguistics as the privileged theoretical core, simultaneously creating bridges towards other (eventually related) theoretical approaches, such as for instance Cultural Linguistics or Psycholinguistics. It explores implications from and for psycholinguistic, cross-cultural and cross-linguistic research, developing studies in different areas of linguistic analysis, such as Cognitive Semantics, Construction Grammar and Discourse and Text Analysis, but also in the area of Language Acquisition and Development (Psicolinguistics), especially with a focus on Acquisition / Learning of Portuguese as a Non-Native Language (L2 or Foreign Language), Portuguese as a Heritage Language (PHL) and Bilingualism.

The specific focus of Hanna Batoréo's work is the study of Portuguese perspectivised as a pluricentric language, observed and analysed in multiplicity of registers, socially and culturally differentiated contexts and types of linguistic variation. Given the Luso-Brazilian character of researchers gathered in the CLCM Group, she collaborates in the research that focuses on the Dominant Portuguese Varieties (DV) of national character – European Portuguese (EP) and Portuguese of Brazil (BP) – but also takes into consideration non-dominant varieties (NDVs) still in formation (i. e., “in-the-making” process) such as, for instance, Portuguese of Timor-Leste.
